Why is the hippo not included in the African Big Five?

Our answer was: The African Big Five are the; Lions, Leopards, African Buffaloes, Elephants, and Rhinos. (This is a popular saying among Africans.) It’s because these animals have the highest degree of difficulty to catch with bare hands, not because of their large size or the fierce fights they put up with. Another reason would be: At the end of the 19th century and the beginning of the last century, many wealthy westerners would spend their holidays in Africa. Among them, hunting was the most enthusiastic activity. Hunting large wild animals on the grassland with a shotgun was a popular fashion at the time, satisfying the desire to conquer (even today there are still protected areas for paid hunting in Africa). Naturally, wild animals are not easy to provoke. At that time, these hunters summarized the wild animals they were most eager to hunt and the most difficult to deal with, as the African Big Five.

And why doesn’t the hippo fall under these conditions? The reasons follows: Hippos like to soak in water but are not very good at swimming, when they run ashore they are relatively cumbersome compared to other animals, and their reaction speed is not agile. Therefore, it is easier for humans with guns to hunt hippos. Popular science knowledge: The African Big Five are very dangerous wild animals, and their numbers are declining. Lions and African elephants are vulnerable species, African buffalo and leopards are near-endangered species, and black rhinos are critically endangered.